The prevailing opinion among farmers that hogs pea fields before enclosing them to fatten is wrong, from the fact that before they are done glaning the fields the weather is cetting very cold, and it is a very diffi-cult task to fatten successfully in cold weather. Possibly, it might be allowed if all of us were provided with warm, comfortable houses to protect our hogs from the cold wind and rain. But it a rail pen ten feet square, in the open weather, covered to the depth of one foot with oak leaves, is a rule fifty years behind date. This is done in many instances to make manure, the cost of which is too great. After the first rain falls you have a pen of slush, into which the corn, or other food, is thrown, and only the little that is clean is eaten, the rest going to the manure pile and allowed to remain under their feet antil it perfumes the air and sickens them. You might say we feed meal in the trough. That is better, I will admit; still, to require yout hog to live in his own filth will impair digestion, and hope lows of smeetic. if all of us were provided with warm, and sickens them. This is certainly praiseworthy, and is taking a legitimate stop in the proper direction for working out the co-operative principles of the Order—concentrating the interest and developing the resources of the Subordinate Granges and their members. Wonder how near the State Grange of South Caroina could approach success in a similar undertaking? We suppose the funds must be raised by contributions from the Subordinate Granges and the gate fees. And although we believe our Subordinate Granges are simily posed of some of the choicest material of the State, we have not the faith to believe that our State Grange could undertake anything of this kind, depending whilly upon the Granges of her jurisdiction for finds to carry out the project.
